B. Coffey & Co., of 237 Water street, New York, by George Probst, led to the identification. Mrs. Probst came over to Brooklyn this morning and identified the remains.

Probst was a tailor. He was nity-six years old and had been in this country for thirty-five years. Lately he has not been well. Mrs. Probst said this morning that her husband left home yesterday afte nous saying he was going to New York to visit a brewer, with the view of purchasing a saloon. He had very little money with him, and left his watch and chain at home. He did not say when he would return, but he was expected home last night.

Might.

Mrs. Probst does not think he committed suicide and is at a loss to account for his death. Probst left three children. Coroner Rosney was notified of the finding of the body.

RUN DOWN BY A TROLLEY CAR.

This Time a Wagon Was Smashed, but No One Was Killed.

Another accident on Brooklyn's trolley road was added this morning to the already wagon owned by Max Ams, of 372 Greenwich street, New York, and driven by Albert Musstruck by electric car 805, on Second avenue, near Forty-second street.

The car was in charge of Motorman Henry Vellson and Conductor John McHall. Nobody was seriously injured, aithough the possengers were badly shaken up. The wagon was broken.

MAXIMUM AND MINIMUM.

BY THE BURNING WORLD POST. Maximum and Minimum Were just about as near allke They only differed as to size. Both had black hair and twinkling eyes, But Maximum was six feet two. While Minimum was two feet six; With loving ways and cunning tricks.

Sire and son they lived alone In a small cottage whence the light

What new thing had been done or said. When he returned no Min was there. He searched the house in wild despair, The yard, the highways far and near, Called him, and then in trautic fear With neighbors searched the streams around In vain, for Min could not be found.

Two miles away lived Colonel mayes, The rich mill-owner, and that morn Before his door a wand'rer lay.
'Twas little Min, the Colonel found, Unconscious on the dewy ground. He gazed upon him, much amazed, The little form, with hunger thin,

Then followed days in which poor Mi In wild delirium called for food, And grew, if possible, more thin. The Colonel and his gentle wife Guarded the flickering flame of life Reason again resumed her sway.

Around bim, very much smazed. Meanwhile, big Max, half crazed with grief, Unable to find aught of Min. In deep potations sought relief; Grew ugly, desperate, and then Harangued the discontented men-" shall we lie starving in the ditch To be down-trodden by the rich? No. Follow me, conquer or kill

Had found his scattered wits again, And when the howling mob drew near The Colonel's gate. he heard with fear The yells and oaths that rent the air From balf-crazed beings in despair.

Then high above all others rose The voice of Max demanding work Or redress for their many woes. Min heard it and sprang out of bed.

He raised the little form once more In his strong arms, bore it downstairs Big Max had walled into the yard, p to the steps, with fists clinched hard. He looked up and beheld his child. The loss of whom had made him wild, Held by the man he called his foe, And staggered as if struck a blow.

What $2,100 Worth of Whiskey Would Do. Twenty round-waisted, comfortable-looking barrels lay on the sidewalk in front of prominent wet-goods establishment the other day, says the San Francisco Chronicle. Leaning against a lamp-post close by and eying the barrels, upon which were various hieroglyphics of a more or less occult significance, stood a man whose general appearance testified to long-continued familiarity with the contents of just such receptacies as those descrited. He held a notebook in his hand and appeared to be working out some abstruse problem, muttering between whiles to himself. This is what he was heard to say: "Lemme see. If I should start out with an plied to Justice Culien in the Supreme Court, applied to Justice Culien in the Supreme Court, thing meanwhile, about eight drinks would give me a most beautiful jag.
